The Hikone Domain is the origin of Ohmi Beef!!

Until the Edo Period, it was forbidden to eat meat in Japan, but there were some aristocrats and samurai who ate it under the pretext of "kusuri-gui," a winter-time practice of eating meat to ward off cold. Because the Hikone Domain presented the Shogunate with cow hides that would be used to make war drums, it was given special permission to butcher cows for meat. This practice later became the origin of Ohmi Beef.

The Buddhist altars of Hikone began with armor and weaponry skills

It is said that, in the middle of the Edo Period, the artisans involved in the production of armor and weapons in Hikone turned to the production of Buddhist altars as a way of using their skills in a peace-time industry. These artisans are able to create all manner of artistic embellishments, including woodwork, goldwork, lacquer art, and sculpture. Today, they also produce everyday lacquerware.
